

International Handling Of Refugees Suggested

Britain Tells U. S. She Gave Sanctuary to 100,000

WASHINGTON, March 4.—

Nearly 100,000 refugees from Nazi-occupied territory have received sanctuary in Great Britain, the British Embassy in Washington said today in making public a proposal to the United States government for international handling of the refugee problem, suggested in an aide memoire on January 20.

The communication, presented to the Department of State by Sir Ronald Campbell, British Minister, called attention to the potentially "unlimited demand" for haven by persons threatened by Germany's policy of extermination, and suggested that "practical measures" be taken.

At the same time, the aide memoire listed what Britain and her colonies have already done for refugees. Besides the 100,000 accommodated in Great Britain, 90,000 more have been taken into the East Africa colonies. Of these, 21,000 are Polish refugees from Persia.

From Greece, 4,830 refugees were evacuated to Cyprus, while an additional 1,000 Greeks and 1,500 emigrants from Palestine were taken by Mauritius. Jamaica is the new home for 3,000 more refugees, more than half of whom come from Gibraltar.

Palestine itself, according to the aide memoire, received 18,000 legal immigrants between April, 1939, and September, 1942, and 4,000 Jewish children accompanied by 500 adults will soon arrive there from Bulgaria. The British Government has pledged itself, if necessary arrangements can be made, to take into Palestine up to 29,000 Jewish children—with a proportion of adults—by the end of next March.
