

let him to another serious slip. His Counsel asked:

Do you know why the Iouma Plant was a so-called G.B.
Chem plant before 1 September 1939?

"Yes. We were an armament plant. We received our quotas from the Plenipotentiary General for Chemical Production."

The "Krauch Plan" had been a later modification within the "Four Year Plan," which Goering had set up in 1936, and in recalling the "Four Year Plan" Professor Krauch was not alone. Before the document was unearthed, the Technical directors had freely admitted having been his advisors under the Four-Year Plan. Ernst Duergin (who later helped to grab the Norwegian metals) had "worked with the Krauch office of the Four Year Plan in the field of electrolytical chemistry." Heinrich Baetefisch had been his Consultant on Leuna synthesis. Ambros had consulted him often.

But Krauch had looked "to the East" with broader vision and earlier than any of them. Almost a year before he had been elevated to "Plenipotentiary" under the Four-Year Plan, he had been Goering's special planner for "economic development." Twelve years before that, a week after Hitler came to power, he had advocated "economic mobilization" in a brochure he offered the Ministry of Economics, called "The Four-Year Plan." The title ~~he~~ testified now, was an unhappy coincidence. Since the First World War he had been a keen student of the economic illnesses of Europe and Asia, and he had believed that in "international science and understanding" lay the solution. As a scientist, he had every right to be confident; in scope and brilliance only Fritz ter Meer excelled him. ~~He had been~~ ~~ter Meer, though~~ ~~head of the Reich's 20,000 rubber and plastic and~~ ~~res.~~

~~expert on French's Caroline, and~~

~~Both Bosch and Duisberg had helped to split the atom (Kranich was Chairman~~ ~~of the Kaiser Wilhelm Institute). With Duisberg and Bosch ailing and~~ soon to die, he and ter Meer were the only two active Farben leaders who combined an overall scientific knowledge of the Farben products, the