

Pollack

factories after he had lost his own was very ambitious! But that he went to see Ilgner and Haeffliger after he was dead and buried made his scheme rather impractical. At any rate, Haeffliger and Ilgner respected his wishes. Haeffliger wrote to Hitler's Economic Advisor, who had gone to Vienna, including the 'New Order.' "The groundwork," he said, "should be laid immediately to prepare assignments to be carried out by the chemical big industry of Austria, within the framework of the Four Year Plan."

(4 SPACES)

RANDOLPH NEWMAN, THE PROSECUTING LAWYER
FROM NEW YORK, WAS PUZZLED:

Concerning this Austrian New Order letter of April 9, 1938 (just after the Anschluss), did I correctly understand that the idea originated with Pollak?

"I said yesterday that this New Order corresponded entirely with the ideas discussed before the Anschluss and with which Pollak quite agreed. One could not call it a New Order then; it was nothing new."

"And this suggestion that the Austrian chemical enterprises 'work within the framework of the Four Year Plan' - - did this idea originate with Pollak?"

"Well, certainly, this letter was drawn up like this in Berlin. If you said something was in the interest of the Four Year Plan, it was simple to get approval. The Four Year Plan! That was the fashion. It had been emphasized even for the most trivial things. Four Year Plan - - good! Accepted!"

"Just a moment. My question means this: Is it your position that you made the suggestions in this New Order Letter voluntarily? Or were they made under governmental pressure?"

"This letter arose because of the wish of Mr. Keppler. He had certain duties down there in Vienna which he had been assigned by Hitler. He wanted just information. Since I was informed very superficially in the discussions, I said, 'Well, we'll arrange it.'"