

four years.
" 2) The German economy must be mobilized for war within four years.

This order creating the Four Year Plan, said ~~Professor~~ Krauch, confirmed what he had learned from Goering about its aims. A war was coming perhaps, but not necessarily an aggressive war. To justify this contention, Krauch could rely only on ~~his own~~ the persuasiveness of his own answers to my questions, for his colleagues had tried to disclaim association with the Four Year Plan as if it were the plague. ~~He had~~ Actually, his technical advisors had been named his advisors under the Four Year Plan, and his power had included direct orders to them at the Farben plants. He stood even more alone ~~in his~~ ^{like this} contention as his counsel interjected a few questions designed to have him release the others from ^{their} ~~any~~ previous associations with him in the Four Year Plan:

Professor Krauch, this is an affidavit of Dr Ilgner's. It is stated that Dr Gajewski was ~~an~~ ^{and} honorary advisor to you in your capacity as Plenipotentiary General. Is that correct?

No, I know nothing of that.

Since 1936, he had not attended a Technical Committee Meeting. For the government he handled the buna contracts, yet he, like ter Meer, was seldom seen at either the now enlarged VW office after 1937. But he had been seen often at Ilgner's older Berlin Northwest 7, and from the day the Four-Year Plan was announced until 1939 he had visited Schmitz in Berlin twice a week. And he had told the investigators that he had informed Schmitz about the "long range aims of the Four-Year Plan."
