

plant.

This brought into the open two feuds which had been brewing: between Krauch and Loeb, between Krauch and the Army Ordnance Office. On January 13, 1937, the director Kuehne wrote to ter Meer of his conversation with an Army Ordnance man.

"The Wehrmacht had considered even the increase at SCHENKLAU (first Buna plant) of from 200 to 2000 tons a risk. The Wehrmacht definitely did not welcome a second plant. General Loeb considered it entirely impudent, and Colonel Philipps (Army Ordnance) on his part would do everything in his power, also with General Loeb, to prevent the construction."

~~Colonel Philipps was also quoted.~~ ^{KUEHNE ADDED THAT COLONEL PHILLIPPS HAD SAID:} "The official on Goering's Raw Materials

Staff who so irresponsibly pushes matters concerning the construction of rubber plants is Dr. Krauch. I felt that for once I.G. should put a stop to this, since it was in the interests neither of the Reich nor of I.G."

The Professor's counsel asked him to comment on Director Kuehne's letter. He said: "The letter shows very clearly how little the Wehrmacht had any connection with (my) office on questions of development....I believe that what I endeavored to do for science was the natural thing for a man to do, whose early paths led to science and research. Whatever I did for the church and for the Jews was, after all, my duty as a human being and as a Christian. You know that I don't like to emphasize my own person. This is not my inclination."

"Something else, Professor Krauch. Reference was made to the fact that you and the other defendants were exponents of big business and capital. Would you give us your comments?"

"I would not describe myself as a big businessman and capitalist. My fortune is a modest one. I own a house, a small farm, and I have I. G. stock to the amount of 150,000 marks - that is what I had. As my origin was a simple one I always regard it as my duty to support my relatives, ^{some} of whom live under very modest and needy circumstances, which took up a great deal of my income."
