upon good reasons because all these countries had had their own experiences during the first world war.

"In New York, did you speak about these views of yours?"

"Yes, apart from an evening with Gordon Renschler (National City Bank), I also spoke to Walter Teagle of the Standard Oil and Mr. Jordan, the President of the National Industrial Conference Board."

A crazy-quilt of economic powers and paradoxes. Something ^{that} which was neither all government nor all business would "cooperate" with these inevitable trends to which he had given new definitions! Half the countries he visited had not even entered the first world war, yet their "sensitivities" based on their war experiences must be considered. Ilgner himself had been wounded in the first war -- was he still tortured by recalling his wounds? One might have seen in ^{Ilgn} ~~this~~ chaotic paradox of thinking a reflection, too, of the Nazi program. Yet these ideas ~~of his~~ were quickly "contested by the Government" as soon as he returned.

^{There were} ~~There were~~ theories he had felt, not concocted. I had been watching Judge Morris, wondering if he realized that below a maelstrom of mysterious emotions, this ~~man~~ man had found collectivist roots, had covered the strange new Socialist doctrine with the sugar of "industrialization" and "export." There was no way of telling. The court listened to the ^{TP Ilgner} bore who had, on the stand, become a fascinating witness. ~~His~~ decision to travel in Asia had not been mainly political. It was 1934 and Berlin Northwest ~~7~~ was still primarily an agency for gathering financial intelligence against the Farben competitors. The leading ~~Northwest~~ Northwest 7 agents were not yet known as Verbindungsmanner but simply as "Finance Liason Men."
