

the American people and the German people." After Hitler and Goebbels refused to ^{lift} ~~lift~~ the boycott on Jewish goods, Ivy Lee advised Farben to tone down the hysterical Nazi ~~by~~ blood~~ered~~ cries and to emphasize the beauty of the German countryside. To please foreign correspondents who had been getting only government handouts, he recommended that Ilgner and the Schurz Association arrange press-evenings with temperate speakers from German ~~public~~ public life.
He suggested that more "leading Americans" be invited to auto through Germany in guided trips.
He furnished Ilgner with a long index of "leading Americans" whom he thought might be most easily impressed. Most important were the articles which should be written for reprinting in American publications, special copies of which should also go to "leading Americans."

The first Ilgner releases indicated ^{the} omission, rather than ^{the} a sugarcoating, of Nazi evils.
Ilgner called it "advertising" and to be sure it was so far removed from the ~~se~~ specific products of the chemical industry that it seemed a new institutional advertising, half political and half business. Besides arranging to have the Carl Schurz Association send the articles to Lee in New York, for his remailing to hundreds of influential Americans, Ilgner personally mailed many thousands, "like Christmas greetings, with my compliments," and distributed other thousands to American newspaper representatives in Berlin.

^{Your honors,}
"An interesting example can be given of the effect. The representative of a very important U.S. bank, which had many loan-investments in Germany, happened to read one of the articles.
I think it was by Dr. Schacht and was entitled, "Will Germany Pay her Debts?" As, at that
