

Lewis Douglas

Now Ambassador to Britain. He is a director of General Motors. In 1934, he broke with President Roosevelt because the government was spending money on Public Works Administration, and because he did not like other New Deal ideas. Prior to the formulation of U.S. policy towards Germany, Douglas, who was connected with SHAEF, did yeoman work to convince the State Department that Germany, after the war, must remain a highly developed industrial country. Today, together with John McCloy and Harriman, Douglas is behind the drive to rebuild the Ruhr industry as an arsenal against Russia.

Louis Lochner

Former chief AF correspondent in Berlin. Very pro-German and for years has been sending home dispatches favoring the Nazi policies. He was a member of the Herbert Hoover mission to Germany in the Spring of 1947, and is credited with being the author of the Hoover report, advocating full restoration of Germany's heavy industry, as of 1936.

Gustave Stolper

He was also a member of the Hoover Mission to Germany in 1947. He is a German-Jewish refugee, and it is reported that he was behind the Hoover moratorium in 1931, favoring Germany. While in Germany, he was the editor of the VOLKSWIRT, the chief organ of the German heavy industry and cartels. It is reliably reported that in 1934, he came to this country to remain permanently, bringing with him many millions of dollars belonging to Dr. Schacht, to invest in this country. Since then, he has become very wealthy operating in Wall St., and is one of the closest economic and financial advisers to Hoover and the Republican party. He is reported to be one of the chief authors of Hoover's plan to rebuild the German heavy industry. It is worthy of note that he used false statistics to prove his point. He is now dead.

Clifford Strike

He is one of the chief engineers of the F.H. McGraw engineering company in New York. While in Germany, he was deputy director in charge of the Reparations Division. His activities on behalf of German proved disastrous to the interests of Germany's victims. The Reparations Program has been the worst failure of our occupation policy. He has just returned from a special mission to Japan, and is advocating practically the complete abandonment of our reparations policy as originally promulgated by Ambassador Pauley.

James Boyd

He was chief of the Branch to control industrial Production in Germany. While there he worked very closely with Draper to rebuild the German heavy industry. He is now chief of the Bureau of Mines. Completely out of sympathy with the Potsdam Agreement. He was appointed to the International Bank with the help of his friend, Winthrop Wadsworth, of the Chase National Bank, and his Wall St. friends.

James J. Wyer

Former president of Republic Steel. Also associated with Jones & Laughlin Steel Co., and the American Steel Co. He was selected by the War Dept. to supervise metallurgical operations in Germany and to control the removal and the dismantling of German steel mills. While in Germany, instead of dismantling the steel mills for reparations, they are to be kept in operation. He is completely unopposed to the theory that Germany needed the dismantling of steel for peace. He vigorously opposed the UN analysis of steel. He worked very closely with Hargreaves on the Calvin Hoover report, and was responsible for its main thesis, namely, that Germany could not live if increased war production was by exporting the product of light industry.
