SUBJECT: Principles of Conduct

TO : All War Department Civilian Employees

The expected conduct of civilian employees is comparable to that of officers in that both are based on good behavior and high moral principles. I desire to emphasize certain principles of conduct which are applicable to the standards of conduct of civilian employees. They are contained herein and will be discussed under the various headings as follows:

- Drinking
- Fraternization
- Illegal cohabitation
- Courtesy and appearance
- Illegal trading or bartering
- Insubordination
- Absence without leave
- Disciplining of civilians
- Morale

Drinking:

Excessive drinking will not be condoned. Drunkenness in itself is a breach of good conduct and the offender is liable to disciplinary action.

Clubs and bars have been established for the comfort and enjoyment of civilians and are not intended for use by individuals who contribute to the discomfort of others through excessive drinking. Club membership of individuals who cannot conduct themselves properly will be revoked.

Fraternization:

It is the policy in this theater and consistent with one's self-respect that there will be no fraternization with known Nazis. It is the responsibility of each civilian to make certain of the status of the persons with whom he associates.

Local commanders are authorized to determine whether or not Germans may visit military social installations. In the Heidelberg area, as an example, Germans are not permitted to enter civilian clubs, messes or hotels.

Illegal Cohabitation:

Maintaining mistresses, retaining female employees or guests, or moving of these people from place to place for immoral purposes will not be tolerated.

Members of the opposite sex will not be entertained in Government billets except as provided by billeting regulations, posted in all billets. Any infraction of billeting regulations may result in termination of contract for cause and return to original point of employment at employee's expense.
