CONFIDENTIAL

(SECTION VII)

Distinct differences exist in the way the two plans propose to utilize funds and the extent to which they intend to grant relief. The Riegner plan also contemplates use of agencies other than the Red Cross particularly in Rumania and France. If a separate agency were used to collect funds, purchase and distribute supplies in Rumania, it would make it extremely difficult for the Red Cross to supervise these activities, and Riegner admits that it would be impossible to control the funds which would be used in France.

H. The person in Rumania who would make the remittances in lei would apparently (according to A3 above) pay Rumanian and possibly German officials for their security. Such payments might be made in lei but it is more likely that dollar or Swiss franc deposits would be required. It is possible that even if the deposits were made theoretically non-assignable
