He testified as to the compulsory nature of his services. On cross examination by Dr. Pelckmann and Dr. Dix he testified as to the barracks and living conditions in the camp for "free workers" at Haidhof.

At the afternoon session the Prosecution called to the stand a Czech witness, Frantisek Dudik. He had been compelled to sign a labor contract in Czechoslovakia in 1943 under threats of having his brother and sister imprisoned. His mother was in a concentration camp at the time. He was sent to the Elbingerode Lime Works and Iron Mine of the Mittelstahl Company where he worked for 6 months and then escaped. He testified as to inhumane treatment of the Russian workers at Elbingerode. The witness eventually was arrested in Czechoslovakia and ordered back to Elbingerode after serving a jail term, but did not go back because of the end of the war.
